The reason most whiteboards are actually white is because standard dry erase pens contrast best against the white background. This is especially true with color pens such as red, green, or blue. Clear or frosted glass marker boards can also be poor backgrounds for contrast.

On the other hand, a glass dry erase board that is color matched to the office or boardroom décor; that incorporates the company branding or marketing color can be very impressive...

The primary purpose of a whiteboard is as a collaborative idea generator and communication tool. The bonus of using a premium quality whiteboard is that it also looks great and lasts virtually forever.

So do we go with white as a marker board background in which writing stands out and is easy for everyone to see, or go for the upscale decorative color background which will add style and pizzazz, but where the writing or images are a little harder to discern? The answer is the GlassWhiteboard.com “Designer” Series magnetic whiteboard. As functional as it is beautiful, the “Designer” Series glass marker boards can be made in almost any size and ship in three to four weeks.
